LOVE AND MARRIAGE. A BACHELOR'S GEOWL.

When lovers are wooing and cooing, Pursuing some woman for wife, Nought is thought of the storm that is brew-

To bring cloudy weather for life; But those who have gathered the bowers
From the footfall of Cupid that spring,
Know there grow in Hymenial bowers Thorns, nettles and briurs, that sting.

He swears never woner was truer: She avows alte sllows not a benu To be near, or appears uught to her, Save es one that she slightly may know. But those who are by when they sigh, And such little perjuties make, Can't conceive how these lovers can lie-Under such mists of mistake.

Their style of exclusive devotion s all very well in its way; But this very unsociable notion They find after marriage 'dou't pay." 'My darling,' will last for a while; For a while be at intervals kissed; But though parted by many a mile: 'Tis rarely that Madame is Miss-ed.

This 'paying nddresses' possesses A charm, as each lover allows; But repeatedly paying for dresses Must follow Hymental vows. Though Cupid the office couceals That each hapless sufferer fills. Yet Hymen, more honest, reveals His duty of 'paging up' bills.

The Paradise promised by Cund. With cherules as guardian-sprites, Is rendered remarkably stupid To those who must sleep there o'nights. These chern's must all of them eat, Though the fact is a lover beneath; And his 'Heaven below' is replete With wailing and cutting of teeth.

But a lover will never discover A facilt in the one he would wed; From his dreams never seems to recover. Till his lamb to the altar is led.

There has long existed a public demand for an effective pargative pil which could be relica on as sure and perfectly sate in its operation. This has been prepared to meet that demand, and an extension been prepared to meet that demand, and an exten-sive trial of its virtues has conel avely shown with what success it accomplishes the purpose designed. It is easy to rake a physical pull, but not easy to make the best of all present pull, but not easy to make the best of all present attempted here and with what success we would respectfully submit to the public decision. It has been unfortunate for the root it hereto hart almost every purative medicine is acre oneous at directain, to the bowers.
